

Bringing the Steiner Waldorf Approach to Your Early Years Practice

The Steiner Waldorf approach to early childhood education was developed by Rudolf Steiner in the early 20th century. Steiner believed that children learn best through play and hands-on experiences. He also emphasized the importance of creativity, imagination, and social development.

The Steiner Waldorf approach is based on the following principles:

- The child is a unique individual. Each child has their own unique needs and interests. The Steiner Waldorf approach respects the individuality of each child and allows them to learn at their own pace.
- Play is essential for learning. Play allows children to explore their world, develop their imagination, and learn social skills. The Steiner Waldorf approach provides children with ample opportunities for play.
- Hands-on experiences are important. Children learn best by doing. The Steiner Waldorf approach emphasizes hands-on experiences, such as painting, drawing, and cooking.
- Creativity and imagination are key. The Steiner Waldorf approach encourages children to be creative and imaginative. Children are given the freedom to express themselves through art, music, and movement.
- Social development is important. Children need to learn how to interact with others. The Steiner Waldorf approach provides children with opportunities to develop social skills through group activities and play.

There are many ways to incorporate the Steiner Waldorf approach into your early years practice. Here are a few ideas:
