The patriarch of the Kapoor family was Prithviraj Kapoor, who was born in 1906 in Peshawar, now part of Pakistan. Prithviraj Kapoor was a stage actor who later moved to Mumbai to pursue a career in film. He starred in over 100 films, including the classics "Mughal-e-Azam" (1960) and "Jhanak Jhanak Payal Baaje" (1955).

Prithviraj Kapoor's eldest son, Raj Kapoor, was born in 1924. Raj Kapoor was a legendary actor, director, and producer who is considered one of the greatest filmmakers in Indian cinema history. He directed and starred in some of the most iconic Bollywood films of all time, including "Awaara" (1951), "Shree 420" (1955), and "Sangam" (1964).

Raj Kapoor's younger brother, Shammi Kapoor, was born in 1931. Shammi Kapoor was a popular actor who was known for his energetic dance moves and charming personality. He starred in over 100 films, including the classics "Junglee" (1961) and "Teesri Manzil" (1966).

Raj Kapoor's son, Rishi Kapoor, was born in 1952. Rishi Kapoor was a versatile actor who starred in over 100 films. He was known for his ability to play both comedic and dramatic roles. Some of his most memorable films include "Amar Akbar Anthony" (1977), "Chandni" (1989), and "102 Not Out" (2018).

Rishi Kapoor's son, Ranbir Kapoor, was born in 1982. Ranbir Kapoor is one of the most popular actors in Bollywood today. He has starred in a number of critically acclaimed films, including "Saawariya" (2007), "Rockstar" (2011), and "Yeh Jawaani Hai Deewani" (2013).

The Kapoors are a family of talented artists who have made significant contributions to Indian cinema. They have produced a long line of iconic films that have entertained and inspired audiences for generations.
