History of Iguazu Falls

Iguazu Falls was formed over thousands of years by the erosion of the Parana River. The river flows over a layer of sandstone, which is gradually worn away by the force of the water. This erosion has created a series of cliffs and waterfalls, which make up the falls today.

The first Europeans to see Iguazu Falls were Spanish explorers in the 16th century. The falls were named after the Guarani word "yguazu," which means "great water." In the 19th century, the falls became a popular tourist destination, and in 1934, they were declared a national park by the Argentine government.

Visiting Iguazu Falls

Iguazu Falls is a popular tourist destination, and there are a variety of ways to visit the falls. The most popular way to see the falls is to take a boat tour. Boat tours take visitors up close to the falls, and they offer stunning views of the falls from all angles. Visitors can also take a walk along the trails that lead to the falls. The trails are well-maintained, and they offer a variety of views of the falls.
