The Cherokee Strip Land Run of 1893 was a pivotal event in American history. It was the largest land run in U.S. history, and it resulted in the settlement of the Cherokee Outlet, a 6.5 million-acre tract of land in present-day Oklahoma. The land run was a race for land, heritage, and history, and it had a profound impact on the development of the American West.

The Cherokee Outlet

The Cherokee Outlet was a strip of land that was originally part of the Cherokee Nation. In 1866, the U.S. government purchased the outlet from the Cherokee Nation for $97,000. The outlet was then opened to white settlement in 1893.

The Cherokee Outlet was a vast and rugged land. It was covered in tallgrass prairie, and it was home to a variety of wildlife, including bison, elk, and antelope. The outlet was also home to a number of Native American tribes, including the Cheyenne, Arapaho, and Kiowa.

The Land Run

The Cherokee Strip Land Run began at noon on September 16, 1893. Over 100,000 people lined up at the starting line, eager to claim a piece of the Cherokee Outlet. The starting gun fired, and the race was on.

The land run was a mad dash across the prairie. Claimants rode on horseback, in wagons, and on foot. They raced to claim the best land, and they often clashed with each other along the way. Within hours, the entire Cherokee Outlet had been claimed.

The land run was a chaotic event, but it was also a historic one. It marked the end of the frontier in the American West, and it led to the settlement of one of the last great tracts of unclaimed land in the United States.
