In a time when the climate crisis looms large and the relationship between humans and nature is more strained than ever, Victoria Hinshaw's poem "The Tables Turned" offers a much-needed reminder of our interconnectedness with the natural world. The poem is a powerful and moving meditation on the beauty and wonder of nature, as well as the urgent need to protect it.

Hinshaw's poem is written in a unique and engaging style that captures the reader's attention from the very first line. She uses a mix of free verse and traditional forms, and her language is both beautiful and thought-provoking. Her imagery is both vivid and evocative, and she has a knack for capturing the essence of the natural world in a few well-chosen words.

One of the things that makes "The Tables Turned" so special is Hinshaw's ability to see the world from a different perspective. She writes from the point of view of the natural world, and she gives voice to the trees, the animals, and the rivers. In doing so, she challenges us to think about our relationship with nature in a new way.

Hinshaw's poem is not just a celebration of nature's beauty. It is also a call to action. She urges us to protect the natural world for future generations, and she reminds us that we are all responsible for the health of our planet.

"The Tables Turned" is a must-read for anyone who loves poetry or nature writing. It is a beautiful and thought-provoking poem that will stay with you long after you finish reading it.
