As the girls grew up, they became more and more different. Ella was beautiful and kind, while Cindy was plain and shy. Ella was popular and had many friends, while Cindy was lonely and had few.

One day, a prince came to town and announced that he was holding a ball. Ella was invited to the ball, but Cindy was not. Ella went to the ball and danced with the prince. The prince fell in love with Ella and asked her to marry him.

Ella and the prince were married and lived happily ever after. But Cindy was not so lucky. She was forced to work as a servant in her stepmother's house. She was treated badly by her stepmother and stepsisters.

One day, Cindy was cleaning the attic when she found a letter. The letter was from her father. He wrote that he had been looking for her all these years and that he wanted her to come home.

Cindy was overjoyed. She ran home to her father and they were reunited. Cindy and her father lived happily ever after.
