The setting

The Blitz was a period of intense bombing by the German Luftwaffe. It began in September 1940 and lasted until May 1941. During this time, London was bombed almost every night. The East End was particularly badly hit, and many of its buildings were destroyed.

Despite the danger and destruction, the people of the East End remained resilient. They continued to work, they continued to fight, and they continued to support each other. The Air Raid Girls is a testament to their courage and determination.
